

2nd Annual Basic Course in Reflectance Confocal Microscopy

NON-INVASIVE DIAGNOSIS OF SKIN CANCER

Sunday, September 22, 2019

Zuckerman Research Center
New York, NY

Memorial Sloan Kettering
Cancer Center

Overview

Reflectance Confocal Microscopy (RCM) is a non-invasive device that images skin lesions at high resolution in vivo, similar to traditional pathology.

This course will help attendees develop familiarity with the basic principles and terminology of RCM. Attendees will learn how to differentiate routinely encountered benign cutaneous neoplasm from malignant neoplasm and integrate RCM in their routine clinical workflow. This course is tailored for both novices and clinicians within three years of practicing RCM in clinics.

This will be an interactive course with lecture style teaching supplemented by hands-on training with renowned, national and international RCM expert faculty. This year's program will include the following sessions:

- Basics: Fundamentals of RCM, terminology and RCM features for neoplastic lesions
- Hands-on demo on the RCM scopes
- Practical aspect of integrating RCM in clinical and dermatological surgery (case-based discussion, billing codes, signing-out reports, and small break-out group case discussion with the experts).

The target audience includes Dermatologists, Dermatopathologists, Surgical Oncologists, Surgical Pathologists, Technologists, Medical Physicist, Industry, Residents, Fellows, Medical Students, and Research fellows.

Space is very limited for this course and we strongly encourage early registration.
